IN HER OWN CARRIAGEWeek-Old Child Left in Wagon
That Was Standing in Hall.

The crying of a baby awoke Mrs. Emma Meiselman of No. 1128 Simpson street, the Bronx, early to-day. In her own baby carriage in the hall she found a week-old child. A handkerchief around its neck was marked "G. F. Sweeney," but a note in Yiddish read: "While the Westchester Grand Jury to 'Kind People—Give this baby over to a kind Jewish family. Its name is Isaac.' The baby was warmly dressed in white flannels. Mrs. Meiselman took it to the Simpson Street Police Station, and it is now in the baby ward at Bellevue.

Alexander's
Shoe Sale

TO-MORROW inaugurates our Annual Winter Shoe Sale at the Sixth Avenue Store, an event looked forward to by hosts of men and women. Apart from the great assortments, tempting values and guaranteed qualities, this year's sale has one big outstanding feature. In spite of a shortage of leather that has sent prices to the highest point known for a generation, we are offering shoes at the old sale prices of the old qualities, but in the new styles and new lasts.

Last June, when business was not over-brisk in shoe factories, our best maker came to us and said: "I have a big lot of leather that I bought at old prices away down. I know it will be worth much more in four months, for leather is due for a big rise. But I want to keep my factory busy and you want to give extra values in your Winter Sale. So let's get together"—and we did.

So we are now able to offer new styles at the old sale prices and of the old qualities. Of course, many thousand pairs from our regular stock are included, but most of these are incomplete in sizes. So these new winter lines, planned for last June, enable us to say that we can fit any normal foot in the early days of the sale.

Men's Winter Shoes

The May Manton Fashions

THIS is one of the prettiest little frocks that could be offered for the making of the new washable materials that are so attractive. It is really a one-piece frock, for the bodice and skirt are cut together, and the belt, which is passed through openings, holds the fullness in a novel way. The pockets with their shaped upper edges are pretty and unusual too. In the picture the dress is made of striped galatee and the trimming portions are of the plain. The scalloped make a most appropriate and most fashionable finish, and do not represent any great amount of labor. The model is a good one for linen and for pique and for gingham as well as for galatee, and also it is pretty made from cashmere or any simple child-like materials of the sort, while the older girls will like it made from serge and from taffeta which is put to so many uses. Serge with trimming of taffeta would be pretty and practical in a practical way with the trimming of green and blue plaid taffeta cut into brown serge is handsome with silk, showing a plaid of brown and yellow shades. For the 6 year size will need 3 1/2 yards of material; 27 inches wide, 2 1/2 yards 38 or 40 inches wide, 2 1/2 yards 44, with yard 27 for the collar, belt and trimming. The pattern 824 is cut in sizes for children from 4 to 8 years.

A STORY OF MOUNTAIN RAILROAD LIFE

CHAPTER I.

In the mid-morning quiet the bathing beach and the ocean reflected only the brightness of the inviting sun. But a little way back from the glistening sand and converging through a small park toward a suburban station the streets of the seaside resort were alive with men and women, hurrying to the city for the grind of the day. Motor cars, too, gliding noiselessly along the boulevards, drew up in turn before the station and discharged their passengers. From one of these a middle-aged, motor-hauling man, Gen. Holmes, an ex-army officer and a railroad man, alighted on the platform. A governess and a pretty little girl, Helen, Gen. Holmes's only child—had accompanied him to the train, and when he turned to the open tonneau to say goodby Helen sprang impulsively half way into his arms. His train pulled in as he quite simply but affectionately kissed his child and boarded the nearest car.

Helen, promised a morning in the

He was a railroad engineer. My father got killed on a train. Who's your father?" "Where did that dog go?" quivered Helen, not answering. "Go! I didn't see. You pretty near got killed. That dog wasn't any good," declared the boy scornfully. "Some day"—he stopped the blood on her knee once more with his handkerchief, and then added grimly: "I am going to drive a big engine some time myself, like my father."

A frantic governess, followed by an open-mouthed chauffeur, came running at that moment toward them. The woman, with a shower of reproaches, caught Helen up in her arms. Passengers told the story. The chauffeur patted George on the back as the governess tried to hurry Helen away.

The child parted reluctantly from her new-found friend. "Are you going to be a really-truly engineer and all smoky-eyed?" she asked. "You better believe I am."

"I don't care," declared Helen, gulping solemnly while the governess tried to hurry her away. "I won't ever forget you—no matter what you are."

THE THRILLING TRAIN COLLISION SCENE

park, left the motor car with her governess the moment they crossed a small scenic railroad running back of the beach. She already had her eye on what she wanted to play with. A contented dog, at peace with the world and sunning himself on a grassy slope, had riveted her alert eye. Helen advanced joyously to get acquainted. The dog seemed adverse to a passive friendship, but the little maid, sitting down, sought something more, and by pulling hard and with confidence at his neck, soon had his uncomplaining head—after a fashion, at least—in her diminutive lap.

The strain on his sensibilities appeared to be amiable and carefree friend could stand. After submitting for a time he rolled over, jumped up and trotted briskly away for a new session and new peace. Helen, undisturbed, followed. Her governess, engaged with the chauffeur, saw nothing of this part of the incident. But a moment later the few spectators in the scenic railroad square, waiting to board one of the miniature trains, saw a protesting dog trotting rapidly away from a curly-haired girl, who briskly and reluctantly followed.

A newsboy, relaxing against a convenient lamp post after the morning rush, watched the pursuit for a moment with languid interest, then turned to look at an approaching train on the scenic road. He seemed no more than half awake. His wits, in truth, were wool-gathering. Every morning found him absorbed greatly in the mysteries of the miniature engine that pulled the scenic railroad train. He had long since become fast friends with the engineer and at night he had dreams of greater engines—indeed, of greater things.

A shout, then a chorus of cries around him from his reverie. The puffing train was pulling swiftly toward the open square. The unhappy dog, casting reproachful glances over his shoulder at his pitiless friend, was galloping anxiously, but directly down the narrow track toward the oncoming train. Helen, seeing or hearing nothing of the train and fixed only on her chase, ran after at top speed. A dozen people saw her danger as the train rounded the curve just in front of her—only one of them made a move. Dropping his unrolls, the day-dreaming newsboy, walking sharply, ran headlong after the heedless girl.

It was none too soon. The dog, dismayed alike by the cries and a second pursuit, sprang, almost in the teeth of the engine, right across the track. Helen, fast on his heels, was ready to jump after, but it would have been pretty certainly a jump to her death. The newsboy caught her arm and whirled her from the engine just as it shot past with the brakes screeching on the drivers. Helen sprawled headlong beside the track, and the boy, unbalanced, rolled on the gravel near her.

He was on his feet in a trice, standing over Helen. She was frightened and breathless, and without speaking he knelt by her. Her eyes began to fill with big tears. She sat confusedly up as her companion brushed the granite dust from her plaid skirt and with a coarse handkerchief began wiping the blood from a cut on one of her pink knees. Her rescuer made little of the accident. He told her not to cry. He even brushed the round tears from her cheeks—Helen liked him. "What is your name, little boy?" she faltered in a would-be commanding tone.

"I'm no little boy," returned her rescuer gruffly. "What are you, then?" she demanded gravely. "I'm a big boy. My name is George Storm; I'm named after my father."

SHOT DOWN IN STREET
AS WIFE AT WINDOW
CRIED OUT WARNINGColletti Dying, and Another
Living in Same House Arrested, With Friends.

As his wife shouted a warning to him from a window of their flat, Frank Colletti, twenty-eight years old, a bricklayer of No. 7 Goerck Street, was shot down in front of that building early to-day. He is dying in Gouverneur Hospital from wounds in the abdomen and neck.

When four suspects, one of them shot in the knee, were taken before him in the hospital he refused to identify them, though the doctors told him he had but a few hours to live.

The police say it was a gang shooting, but they have been unable to learn the cause. According to Mrs. Colletti, several men culled at her door during the night and asked for Frank. They aroused her suspicions and for an hour she leaned out of a window watching for her husband.

"Frank, come right up! Hurry!" she shouted when she saw him approaching the stoop. A moment later several shots were heard and Colletti fell. Several men ran away.

At 2 A. M. a taxicab took a wounded man to Bellevue. His right kneecap was shattered, but there was no hole in his trousers. The police were called and held the three men who came with him. He described himself as Benjamin Sero, twenty-five, No. 7 Goerck Street, the house in which Colletti lives. He said as he was leaving the house some one began to shoot and a bullet hit him. He knew nothing about the trouble, but fearing he would be blamed, went to friends and borrowed some other trousers.

CALLED TO DOOR AND SHOT.

Bartender, Dying in Bellevue, Probable Victim of Gang Customer.

Michael Robinson, twenty-two years old, of No. 338 West Thirtieth Street, a bartender in Thomas Nolan's saloon at No. 345 Ninth Avenue, was shot early to-day when called by an unknown person to the side door of the saloon. He is in Bellevue Hospital with a bullet in his abdomen and probably will die.

The saloon is a resort for the neighborhood gangs, and Robinson has frequently put out noisy customers. It is thought that some one whose enemy he so incurred shot him in revenge. The injured man has not been able to make any statement.

"SMOKE-SQUAD" AT FIRE.

Adamson Has Helmeted Men Tied Together in Saloon Cellar.

The smokeless cellar fire in several months kept firemen under Chief Kennedy and Deputy "Smoky Joe" Martin working for an hour this morning in a cellar under the saloon of William Engelhardt, at No. 87 West Twenty-third Street. The place was filled with tightly packed bundles of excelsior and a large quantity of liquors.

The first firemen to arrive found it impossible to get near the blaze and Chief Martin called on the Rescue Squad. Commissioner Robert Adamson, who hurried over when the squad of smoke fighters was called, decided that even with the helmets they were in danger and directed that a rope be placed about the waist of each man. The helmets proved safe and none of the men called for help.

What Causes Tuberculosis?

In the opinion of many medical authorities, tuberculosis is aided, if not actually caused, by a loss of time from the system. Where there is a declassification, the time lost must be supplied medically," says Dr. J. W. Corbett of San Antonio in the May, 1915, issue of "Medical Progress."

To supply these lost hours is difficult, since in some forms they are not easily assimilable.

In Eckman's Alternative, however, calcium chloride is so combined with other valuable ingredients as to be assimilated by the average person, and to this, in part, is due its success.

We make no boastful claims, but many cases of tuberculosis apparently have yielded to it. It contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, so is safe to try. From Riker-Hegeman Co., your druggist or direct.
